

The Daily Astorian.

ASTORIA, OREGON.

SATURDAY, JUNE 16, 1883.

Don't Send Them Here.

THE New York Herald says: "The success of Crook's force is a question to which, we trust, the president will give the attention which its importance demands. Crook and his men have once more subdued the Apaches. The accounts agree substantially that all the survivors of this band are confirmed murderers, and will come into the possession of the government as prisoners, together with the spoils of their numerous robberies and assassinations. What is going to be done with these savages? Are they once more to be collected on a reservation, there to be fed and fattened until they are ready for another raid? In the first place the leaders of this band ought to be hanged, and that quickly, and the remainder be transported out of Arizona and New Mexico. Their tribal organization ought to be carefully but thoroughly destroyed, and individual families ought to be distributed among the agencies of reservations in Northern California, in Oregon and Dakota, where Apaches so distributed and no longer united, would be harmless. They are the lowest of American Indians, and most brutal and incorrigibly ferocious. The least that can be done with them is to place them where they will have no power to combine for murder and revenge.

THE intimate relations between this country and England is singularly illustrated by the fact that the present disturbance in Ireland is likely to become an important factor in our national politics. The question of tariff and free trade comes up in the next election, and if the free Americans of Irish descent who help so universally to run this country can be shown that a vote with the free trade party will help England, it will be to them the strongest inducement to oppose it. Campaign literature is already being prepared, and will be in circulation where it is expected to do the most good.

THE result of the trial of the Star-route thieves will have two effects; it will deter others from that particular line of rascality as it costs too much to get clear, and it will decrease republican majorities in Ohio and Indiana.

CHIEF MOSES, with an interpreter and two chiefs, is on his way to Washington to confer with Secretary Teller about the reservation in Washington Territory, half of which was recently thrown open to settlement.

GERMANY evidently believes in the paternal form of government, having lately bought six railways at a cost of 325,000,000 marks, and contemplates control of the entire railway system of the empire.

MARRIED.
